Scottish government calls all clans home again to gather at Stirling in July 2014

MacMillans invited to the Outer Hebrides after Stirling events for special gathering 14th - 17th July

Highland Clans to join together for final flourish in Inverness on following weekend

A few years ago the Scottish Nationalist Government announced its intention to hold another "Year of Homecoming" in 2014, which is also to be the Year of the Referendum—when the Scots get to vote on separation from England. 2014 is the 700th anniversary of the great Scottish victory over the English at the battle of Bannockburn, and will also see the Ryder Cup being played at Gleneagles.

Ever since the spectacular but financially disastrous Gathering 2009 during the last Year of Homecoming, a repeat performance of it (or of the spectacle at least) has also been promised; and now the dates and host town have been announced. Though there are no details at the moment of what will happen at Stirling, the release of the dates does allow clans to make their own plans for complementary gatherings and associated events.

Clan MacMillan International hope to hold its associated gathering on the Outer Hebrides - probably centred on the island of Benbecula - between the 14th and the 17th of July, to be followed by some joint events with other clans in the Capital of the Highlands over the weekend of the Inverness Highland Games - which take place on the 19th of July.

The statue of King Robert the Bruce at Bannockburn

According to Stirling Council, its 2014 events will be similar to 2009:

Plans for Clans 2014, an international gathering of the clans (11–13 July 2014) are taking shape, to include a Clans Village, a cavalcade procession between the Village and Stirling Castle, and entertainment on the spectacular Castle Esplanade. There would also be a programme of musical and other cultural events in venues across the city. Clans 2014 will run alongside the Sekonda Stirling Highland Games. There will be a link-up with the Bannockburn Battlefield site to give visitors another opportunity to commemorate the ... 700th anniversary.

The clan event will happen a few weeks after the actual anniversary of the Battle of Bannockburn, which took place in 1314 on the 24th of June.

Stirling Council have announced there will be separate "Bannockburn 700" celebrations taking place between the 23rd and 29th June, which will include battle re-enactments and the official opening of the National Trust for Scotland's new Visitor Centre at Bannockburn.

More details of both events should be posted as they are decided on the website set up by Stirling Council: www.stirling2014.co.uk..

Who did the Macmillans fight for at Bannockburn?

Everyone wants to be on the winning side, especially a chief whose life and lands are at risk if the wrong choice is made. Gylebricht McMalene, the fourth man bearing the clan surname to appear in the historical record, lost his lands in the Barony of Ken in 1308/1313 for just such a misjudgement, choosing John Balliol's patriotic party against the usurper and murderer Robert Bruce.

That may not be the way you learnt your Macmillan history, but it's what the contemporary evidence - as opposed to the wishful thinking of some later clan historians - shows.

On the other hand, Gilchrist Maolan's descendant John de Lany appears in 1326 as one of Bruce's key officials (Constable of Tarbert Castle), and the Macmillans were indeed allied to Bruce's friends the MacDonalds in later years. But what about in 1314; and what about that tartan in the royal colours of Scotland? Plenty to debate in the next two years. Do join in.

A message from the Chief...

A new way to receive your Clan Centre publications - and in colour.

Printing and postage costs have been rising steeply; but we're reluctant to raise subscriptions. So we hope you'll think hard about opting for an e-mail attachment (PDF) instead of a 'hard copy' of the Newsletter/Magazine, starting this Christmas. The big 'plus' is that you'll get full colour in both issues.

If for any reason you would rather continue as at present, we'll respect your wishes. If, however, you're willing to accept the electronic version, please send me - chief@clanmacmillan.org - your name (and postal address to identify you beyond doubt) and your current eaddress as soon as convenient.

We're hoping this will revolutionise our finances and enhance your enjoyment of Graeme's publications.

George.

...and a note from the Editor

A number of Clan MacMillan societies are already sending out their newsletters as email attachments - one advantage of which for us is that it's easy to lift material from them for the international publications - and as George says it also means you can get them all in colour.

We do appreciate however that not all of you have email and that it's important therefore to continue to offer a paper version. It has been suggested that, in order to save more money, and to make the e-version even more attractive, all colour should be taken out of the paper version of the Magazine; but I am strongly of the opinion that it would be unfair on those who don't have email, and that a clan magazine needs an element of colour to exhibit our tartans and spectacular events properly.

The need to save money however is urgent since some UK postal rates have gone up this year by as much as 30%. Your editor/archivist/webmaster agreed last year to take a reduction in his monthly stipend in order to help the savings; but the issue needs to be addressed at the other end too - i.e. we need to raise more money as well as to make more savings.

This does not mean that the "Conclave Challenge" - whereby branches voluntarily contribute a sum to the Clan Centre proportionate to the size of their membership - has necessarily to go up, since we all know that the branches are equally hard-pressed. The amount raised for the Clan Centre through special events as George and I toured Canada and the USA last summer shows what else can be done with initiative and effort. We're also looking at ways of using the Project that soaks up a large part of our money - MAOL - to generate income too, so expect news about that in due course.

Retirement of long-serving Australian Society Treasurer June Senior

June Danks, President of the Clan MacMillan Society of Australia, writes:

In 1982 George MacMillan, son of Sir Gordon MacMillan, the then Chief of Clan MacMillan visited Australia and met a group of people who had connections with name of MacMillan. A teacher at Scotch College by the name of Donald Robertson Thomson Macmillan arranged this gathering on the banks of the River Yarra at the school and encouraged by his wife Geva and others decided to form a branch of the Clan in Australia. He was President from June 1983 to September 1987.

June Senior was not at this event because she was travelling but she joined the Clan later in 1983 and has been a member of CMSA for 27 years. She has held the following roles:

President, September 1987 to October 1993; Treasurer 1993-2011; Editor of CMSA Newsletter, which is produced 3 times each year, 1990-2003.

June and husband Max set up the first tent of CMSA at the Ringwood Games in 1989 (the tent was loaned by Bruce McMillan). She served as the Minute Secretary of the Council of Clans 1989-1991.

In November 1997, when Chief George MacMillan of MacMillan & Knap made a second visit to Melbourne, she was invested as a Companion "Honaris Causa" of the Community of the Tonsured Servant.

June has been a conscientious and diligent member and her ancestors from the Isle of Arran have been researched by a relative, Robert McMillan-Kay, who was also Editor of the Newsletter for six years (1983-1989).

Over the years June's husband Max has audited the accounts. June is always friendly and helpful to everyone. Over her watch subscriptions rose to 95, but recently have slipped. She took an interest in all members.

At the AGM in September 2011 she resigned as Treasurer but will remain a member of CMSA. She and Max were sincerely thanked for their many contributions and awarded Life Memberships of CMSA.

New Zealand weather plays havoc with games

Jim McMillan, President of the Clan MacMillan Society of New Zealand reports:

The final Highland Games of our summer season which were held at Lindisfarne College in Hastings over Easter were rained off the ground and moved indoors for the first time in over 40 years. With very poor weather for two weeks prior to Easter and fields too wet to allow vehicle access or parking, the organisers reluctantly made an early call on the Thursday prior, cancelling all outdoor events. Just as well as the rain & wind continued through the weekend and into Easter Monday.

The Hawkes Bay and Gisborne East Coast weather has been poor this year. I imagine that their reputation as the provinces with the highest annual sunshine hours is under threat this year. Naturally Marilyn and I did not drive the 200 miles each way under these circumstances. It has since been reported

(and I intend to quote this in my July issue) that the Piping and Dancing was a success and that seven Clans attended but the location inside was not good for either the clans and stalls, described as cramped and a little noisy. Also and only to be expected; foot traffic and food sales was well down due to lack of public attendance. It is after all, only a college assembly hall with adjacent rooms whereas 40 years ago we would have had the use of stadium facilities.

As we're moving into winter now our Highland Games season has concluded and there are no "Coming Events", other than a Committee Meeting in July, until about October.

At our AGM in February, Cathy decided not to stand for re-election as Secretary. Carrol Elliott was elected as Secretary, having had a one year break from this office.

News from Appalachia the clan's largest branch

Young at heart members Betty-Jo Barclift (aged 75) and Harry Chandler (77) got married on the 28th April. Betty-Jo has hosted visiting clanspeople in her lovely home in Greensboro, NC, and Harry donned a kilt for the first time to meet Chief George at Grandfather Mountain last year, and was married in it.

Rudy Batchelor, Nashville, NC, husband of long time member Julia Mulliken Batchelor, died on 21 February 2012. Rudy is remembered at Finlaystone as the "Master Chef' for his BBQ expertise.

Alex Brown CTS has graduated from Army Basic Training, and will be going on to 16 weeks training at Medic School.

The branch's AGM will be held during the Grandfather Mountain Games over the weekend of July 12th to 15th.

The MacMillans on the isle of Benbecula

By Angus Macmillan

There are a number of MacMillan families in the islands that have been separate at least since records began. Benbecula has had four such lines and perhaps more, one in Balivanich, one in the central townships of Torlum and Griminish and two in Uachdar. South Uist probably matches that number of lines though there has been rather more movement and the distinctions are less clear. There has always been a degree of uncertainty and something of an ongoing debate about whether these families originated in Lochaber or Knapdale.

The late MacMillan clan bard, the Rev. Somerled MacMillan, Fife born to a Glasgow ex Isles of Mull and Lismore family, provided two seemingly fairly specific pieces of evidence concerning origins. The first was:

"About the year 1540 a party of MacMillans from Locharkaigside accompanied young Allan, son of the deceased Dougal MacDonald of Moidart when he returned to claim his father's estates. Some of the descendants of those MacMillans went to South Uist in the service of Clanranald."

This could be clearer. Dougal VI of Clanranald, who was regarded as both bad and mad, was murdered by his people on the mainland in 1520, his sons being minors at the time. He was briefly succeeded by his uncle as Alexander VII but, by the time that Dougal's sons, Angus and Allan, were of age towards the end of the 1530s, Iain Muidertach VIII, the great and long lasting Captain of Clanranald, was in full possession. He chose to treat Angus and Allan, who had been brought up in their mother's Lochiel family over the hills from kindly, granting them Moidart, lands in South Uist. Given the MacMillan connection with the Camerons, it is reasonable they should have acted as a 'tail' for Dougal's sons and any move to

Angus Macmillan, Oxford, is the great grandson of Angus Og Macmillan who left Grimnish, Benbecula, to settle on the shores of Loch Fyne, Argyll, in the 1860s

South Uist will have been immediate as the sons settled there, built Caibeal MacDhugaill as their burial place at Howmore and descendants, known as the 'MacDougal MacDonalds of Morar.' are still in situ.

The Rev. Somerled continued: "Malcolm MacMillan was personal servant to Allan of Moidart during the '15 (Jacobite) rising."

Elsewhere, he writes a little more fully on the same topic:

"During the much disputed battle of Sheriffmuir, in 1715, Calum MacMillan, the ancestor of John MacMillan, piper to the (Clan MacMillan) Society, was fighting under Ailean Muidertach. His son married one of the maid-servants of Flora MacDonald's household."

This too has its problems as evidence. Juxtaposition suggests that Somerled saw Calum/Malcolm as a descendant of his suggested earlier MacMillan migration to the islands with Dougal's sons.

Ailean of Moidart was Allan Dearg MacDonald XIV of Clanranald, who had indeed had to take up residence in South Uist, the first of the Chiefs/Captains of Clanranald to do so as, returning from army service in the French cause, his Moidart base at Castle Tioram was still garrisoned by Government troops in the aftermath of the 1688/9 troubles. However, it was from his more populous mainland estates in Arisaig, Morar and Moidart, that he collected the bulk of the forces that accompanied him to Sheriffmuir, so it would appear that Calum could equally have been located there.

The Flora MacDonald addition does not directly strengthen the evidence; whilst Flora was raised in the parental home in Balivanich, Benbecula, her stepfather had to leave for Skye at Whitsun 1746 as a result of an affair with a married woman, six years before Flora's marriage and, in fact, she never had a household in Benbecula or South Uist, only in the Isle of Skye.

The Rev. Somerled confuses the issue further by introducing wholly unsupported speculation. He noted that Sir Fingon Makmulane was Rector of Benbecula in 1542 and suggests that:

"... it is reasonable to believe that he brought some of his relations along with him from Knapdale. This may account for a number of MacMillans being in Benbecula. We are proud of Angus MacMillan, that great prince of seannachies and storytellers ..."

This latter was Aonghas Barrach, born at 13 Griminish, Benbecula, but, unfortunately for the Rev. Somerled's suggestion, as his cognomen suggests, his MacMillans were from Barra rather than native to Benbecula. The assumption about Sir Fingon as progenitor, or for that matter concerning Donald MacMillan, first Protestant Minister of Benbecula and 'ane very auld man' in 1626, is no more than guesswork and there must be some doubt that, having gone underground for a century and a half, the name should then be restored when the use of surnames began to sit alongside patronymics in the islands.

The speculation proceeds:

"At an early period the MacMillans of Lochaber were busy plying between the two Uists and the mainland in the business of cattle dealing and, no doubt, a number would come to settle in these islands."

Another Clan historian, albeit one who claimed roots in the Western Isles, is Christopher W. McMullen. In his 1990 story of the clan, The MacMillan Endeavour, he gives a number of specific details of movements of MacMillan groups. His assumption, seemingly derived from the Rev. Somerled, was that those in Benbecula were descended from the Protestant Minister above and those in South Uist were associated with Sir Fingon. He also mentions a group serving the MacPhees in the Isle of Colonsay; Malcolm MacMillan above, who he describes as bodyguard rather than simply personal servant to Ailean Dearg MacDonald XIV of Clanranald; South Uist MacMillans who 'became Roman Catholics' and, in the 'religion of the yellow stick' incident, fell out with their landlord, MacDonald of Boisdale, precipitating the 1772 Glenaladale emigration to St John's (PEI).

None of these add to the evidence and the yellow stick story was imported from the Isle of Eigg and had nothing to do with the 1772 migration which, in the event, barely involved the inhabitants of South Uist.

Taken together, these various references suggest that there may have been a multiplicity of MacMillan lines in a population that was overwhelmingly of Clan Donald and that never numbered more than about 6,000 souls. Though inherently doubtful, there are reasons not to regard the thought as necessarily in error. To date, three of the four certainly separate lines in Benbecula as far as the records extend, have been Y-DNA tested and there is no shared genetic link in genealogical or historic times. What is also noticeable is that none of the views about the origins of the island MacMillans derive from the island families themselves or directly from local tradition. There is such a thread though that hints at a very different story.

Dr Alasdair MacLean, brother of the Gaelic poet Sorley, the South Uist GP, is on record in his Notes on South Uist Families published in the Transactions of the Gaelic Society of Inverness as regarding the MacMillans as an indigenous clan, having come by the name through borrowing when Anglicised surnames were introduced for record keeping purposes. The Rev. Dr Angus MacDonald of Killearnan, joint author of the great History of Clan Donald, was a Griminish native whose family home was overlooked by one set of MacMillans and who went to school in Balivanich next door to another such family. In his MS history of Benbecula and South Uist, long before Dr MacLean's article, he had already pointed to a family tracing ancestry to a Maolmuire, hence mac Mhaolmhuire and the shared root that saw the adoption of the MacMillan surname.

The only problem for those of us carrying the name has been that, though familiar in early records of the mainland MacMillans, until very recently, the given name Maolmuire was unknown in sloinneadh or record in the islands. That has now changed.

Maighstir Alasdair MacDonald, uncle of Flora and father of Prince Charles' Gaelic tutor and Iacobite poet of the '45, Alasdair MacMhaighstir Alasdair, was born and raised in Balivanich. On 1 December 1694, Maighstir Alasdair wrote to his lawyer in Edinburgh suggesting 'naming and shaming' his brother-in-law for careless illtreatment of the latter's wife during pregnancy, leading to her death, nominally in order to warn others, and he named Maolmuir Mc Cahill vc Murchy i.e. a son of the Benbecula bard, Cathal MacMhuirich, as a credible witness. This would seem, putatively, to add a MacMhuirich as MacMillan line in Benbecula and the Uists to the notion of those carrying the MacMillan names as all incomers. It may even explain the close connections between families bearing these two names in the early history of the island.

The project now is to complete the Benbecula testing, which is less simple than it sounds as the male line of the missing family left for Cape Breton in the 1840s and 'daughtered out' there, with the males of the family leaving for California. There are more readily accessible though less well documented families to investigate in S. Uist.

Clan MacMillan in the UK

Prominent MacMillans join Camerons at Annual Battle of Culloden Commemoration

Nigel and Gordon Macmillan - both Past Presidents of The Clan MacMillan Society (1892) - and Sheila Macmillan were joined this year at the Gaelic Society of Inverness's Annual Culloden Commemoration Service by longstanding Clan MacMillan International member Sir Kenneth Calman, who as Chairman of the National Trust for Scotland, laid the second wreath at this year's ceremony.

Sir Kenneth, who's pictured above (right) marching to the memorial cairn alongside Lochiel and the usual large Clan Cameron contingent, has had a particularly prominent place in Scottish politics in recent years as the Chairman of a Commission examining options for further devolution of power from the UK to the Scottish Parliament.

Clann 'ic 'illemhaoil Abrach - the Lochaber Macmillans - fought at Culloden as a company of Lochiel's regiment, led by their own officers and commanded by Captain Ewen Macmillan the younger of Murlagan.

Focus on Finlaystone

Two winter storms with particularly severe winds have brought down a number of Finlaystone's bigger trees in recent months, including one close to the MacMillan Memorial Wall. Apart from the loss of some particularly fine arboreal specimens there doesn't however appear to have been any other serious damage - and at least the MacMillan family's log baskets will benefit for the next winter.

The Finlaystone website has been revamped and now has a wonderful selection of new photographs on the home page which are well worth a look: www.finlaystone.co.uk.

If you're thinking of visiting the Chief - who's always pleased to see members of the clan - and the Clan Centre, don't forget that Arthur and Barbara now have accommodation to let on the estate, in the shape of 2 self-catering barns (shown below). See www.finlaystonecottages.co.uk.

Highland Games in England

Clan MacMillan International Trustee Peter MacMillan, who lives in Lancashire, England, is hoping to attend a Highland Games being held in Ashbourne, Derbyshire, on Sunday the 15th of July.

These one-day games have existed for a few years, and are only attended by a few clans at the moment; but they are keen to attract more, and since Ashbourne is situated in the middle of England it's ideally placed.

The organisers, who contacted Clan Mackenzie about it some months ago, say lots of expatriate Scots attend, making it a good opportunity for Scottish-based clan societies to recruit new members.

Any MacMillans interested in attending can contact Peter about meeting up at the games by phone on 01942-871358 or by email to peter.macmillan2@btinternet.com

Clans to gather again during Inverness Games

Back in Scotland, the MacMillans will join other northern clans for a gettogether in the MacLean Room at Eden Court during the day of the Inverness Highland Games, which take place in the neighbouring Northern Meeting Ground on the afternoon of Saturday 21st July - preceded by an Armed Forces Parade from the city centre to the games ground.

Since Highland Council moved the games from Bught Park to the Northern Meeting Ground - the Inverness Games' original venue - there hasn't been space for a Tent of the Clans. The social side of the annual clans get-together was missed as much as the opportunity to recruit new members from visitors to the games, so the Highland clans have been looking out for a suitable venue to reinstitute this enjoyable occasion.

The use of the MacLean room by his brother Nigel for regular jazz gigs gave Graeme the idea of hiring it for the clans, since it's so close to the games arena, and enough clans have signed up to join the MacKenzies and MacMillans to make it viable. For details contact Graeme on 0790-176-4329 or Graeme@highlandroots.org

Central States Branch fascinates with spellings of the name M'millan

Mike McMillen reports:

We set up shop at the Minnesota Scottish Games yesterday [19th May]. As seems to have become a tradition, the weather wasn't what one would call comfortable: the temperature nearing 90 and very windy. Thankfully the humidity was low otherwise it would have been excruciating. Last year it topped out about 40. Good attendance this year, however.

People seem fascinated with one of our signs, this one stating "MacMillan has over 200 spellings. Septs include Baxter, Bell, Blue Brown, Millan and Walker." Non-MacMillans will frequently enquire about the spellings and I noticed at least six people taking photos of it.

Art prize for McMillan descendant in Australia

The Perth Institute of Contemporary Art [PICA] recently announced that its 2012 winner of the $35,000 Dr Harold Schenberg Art Prize is Lachlan Petras, a recent graduate from Monash University, Victoria, for his work entitled Aggregate [shown below], a video projection onto a concave sculptural object made up of over 300 plywood facets. Lachlan is the son of Elizabeth McMillan, a Past President of the Australian Clan MacMillan society. The PICA press release said:

"The judges found their task particularly difficult when faced with an extraordinarily strong field of work by this year's participating Hatched artists. In addition to selecting the award winner they gave honourable mentions to artists Sarah Jane Haywood, Amina McConvell and Pip Stafford.

Recalling motifs from Velazquez and Francis Bacon and conflating cinematic tropes with architectural structures, Aggregate presents the viewer with two protagonists, a mirror -plated figure and a little person, with symbolic Superman and Transformers tattoos, who are situated within a wind tunnel facility - a strangely mysterious site that resembles a science fiction set, silo or space station.

PICA Director Amy Barrett-Lennard says, 'When considering an artist for this award the judges were looking for a distinctive and individual approach, a refined visual language, conceptual rigour, technical excellence and clarity of communication. We got all this and more in Lachlan Petras' Aggregate, a fresh, intelligent, ambitious and refined work that lead us to believe that this graduate had the capacity to significantly further their career as an artist'".

Following their AGM and the Costa Mesa Ceilidh in May, the Pacific Branch of Clan MacMillan will be in attendance at the following Highland Games this summer:
